We thank our friend of the South-erner for calling our attention to the omission of the Tarboro Fire Company in our list of those present at Charlotte.

It was inadvertent and unavoidable. We had to rely upon memory and upon such information as we could gather from by-standers. We were not taking notes like brother Harrell. The gallant company from Tarboro added much to the brilliancy of that memorable pageant, but in the multitude of names we had forgotten that as well as that of some others. We were conscious of the imperfection of our enumeration, but when we penned our article could not rectify it. We make the amende.

The fearful calamity at South Holyoke, Mass., on Thursday is probably the most dreadful of all the horrible catastrophes which have been recorded in this year of horrors. Thoughtless of the contemplation of this awful holocaust in which seventy or more helpless beings were offered up to the demon of fire. It is impossible to realize the idea of a church crowded with females and children suddenly changing their fervor of religious devotion to a frenzied struggle for life with the fierce blast of flame instantly aroused into consuming fury. That mad, mad, furious, convulsive battle for existence cannot enter into the brain of sober contemplation. It is too unreal to think of, too impossible to be held as possible, except to the actual, despairing, crazed spectators, or to those who have escaped scorched and maimed, living, but mutilated mementoes of a terrible reality.

Some inquiry has been made as to the meaning of the transfer of Indians to Florida—who they were, and what they were sent there for. It appears that they are the worst and most diabolical specimens of different Western tribes who have been captured by the U. S. troops, and who are too dangerous to turn loose again. The captives represent five or six different tribes—Comanches, Arapahoes, Cheyennes, &c., and are all notorious for bloody deeds and demonic cruelty. There are three women among them, one of whom is known to have split open the head of a white prisoner with an axe. They are represented as being exceedingly dangerous on the trains, watching every opportunity to kill the whites.

They will be taken to a fort at St. Augustine, where they will probably perish in confinement, for they will scarcely ever be turned loose again.

OUR LIVING AND OUR DEAD.

On the 1st of July this valuable periodical will enter upon a new volume, and with the addition of 16 pages. We regard this as substantial evidence of a support which the people of the State would be false to themselves if they did not make good. There is a steady progressive improvement in the Journal, and as the organ of the Historical Society of North Carolina, recently organized, it holds out additional inducements to encouragement. The recent awakening on historical subjects, and the knowledge of how much has been irretrievably lost by the want of some permanent form of record, should give the above named periodical additional value as a safe place of entry and deposit of what can be gathered from the wrecks of the past, and treasured up from the current history of the day.

The will of Bodman the recently deceased millionaire of Cincinnati, bequeaths $25,000 each to the German Protestant and German Catholic Orphan Asylums, $50,000 to the Society of Natural History, and the remainder of his money to his partner. He leaves nothing to his relatives, and a lawsuit is probable.

SOUTHERN KNIGHT ERRANDRY.

Under the above caption, the Charlotte Observer has a capital article which we transfer to our columns. We plead guilty to some of its imputations, for we did endorse and applaud Miss Anna Dickinson. We did so with all sincerity, for her conduct here was lady-like and entirely unexceptionable, and her lecture evinced much intellectual force. She was heralded by the Virginia Press in the most flattering way, and the journals of that State are not apt to err in questions of propriety. We had some satisfaction too, in subduing what may have been unfounded prejudices against a woman, who had apparently been falsely connected with associations hostile to the South, or subversive of the dignity and true position of her sex.

We have no regrets to express for our approval of her here, with the lights then before us. Her after conduct at Chicago will only make us less credulous or less chivalric in the future to those who thus undertake to impose upon Southern audiences by displays of intellectual cultivation, and who are really collecting material to be used in inflaming Northern hostility to our people.

An enlightened public judgment sustains the local editor of the News in the matter of Miss Armstrong. We have nothing to add on this point.

DEATH OF N. W. WOODFIN.

Western North Carolina mourns the loss of one of its most distinguished men, and the whole State one of its most prominent statesmen. N. W. Woodfin died in Asheville on the morning of the 23rd inst.

We are not in possession of such particulars as would enable us to give an accurate biographical sketch of the deceased. Of his early years we know but little. His parentage was highly respectable, but poor, and Mr. Woodfin was without the advantage of early education. His early pursuits were connected with mechanics, and it is said that he was one of the carpenters engaged in building the first Court House in Asheville. But his mind was vigorous and active, and he was fired by ambition to display talents he felt he possessed, in more intellectual avocations. He applied himself to the study of the law, we think under the late Gov. Swain, and upon his admission to the bar soon made his way to the top of his profession. He without doubt ranked as the first lawyer of the West for a number of years, and his reputation throughout the State put him on an equal footing with the ablest every where within its borders. He was remarkably successful as a criminal lawyer, but his sound judgment, his quick appreciation, and his indefatigable industry made him equally ready and powerful in cases either criminal or civil.

The ardent nature of Mr. Woodfin always made him active and prominent in politics. Without being strictly a popular man, the soundness of his judgment, and the liberality of his views, always looking to the improvement and advancement of his section, gave him a hold upon the confidence of his large constituency which remained unbroken for many years, and which only had a shock from the diversities of opinion which preceded and accompanied the late civil war. Previous to the call for a Convention in the winter of 1861, Mr. Woodfin had been an ardent Union man. His views underwent a change and he was a zealous member of the Convention of May which passed the ordinance of Secession.

Mr. Woodfin was ardent in fact in everything to which he applied himself, and the activity of his brain found employment as well in the pursuits of private life as of public life. He was an earnest advocate for the system of internal improvements which might open up the West to communication with the East. He was a warm promoter of the interests of education. He was an enthusiastic farmer and horticulturist. And he was a true friend and exemplar of religion. Early in manhood he became a member of the Methodist Church. Afterwards, when an Episcopal congregation was organized in Asheville, he attached himself to that church, of which he was an active and useful member to the day of his death.

Mr. Woodfin was in the State Senate from 1844 to 1852 inclusive, and was always regarded as one of the most valuable members of that body. He was also a member as we have said of the convention of 1861.

Of the many incidents of his busy life we have not room to speak. His activity always found employment, and the advance of years found no flagging in his energies. A week previous to his fatal illness he was engaged in the defense in two capital cases, with all the vigor and ability of his earlier professional exertions.

In a life so active and so varied in its pursuits, and with a temperament so ardent, defects of character were unavoidable. He could scarcely be called a popular man, yet the excellencies of his qualities, the purity of his purposes, and the zealousness with which he pursued his aims, secured him the unabated confidence, and commended the voluntary tribute of respect from all classes of his constituents, and of the citizens of North Carolina. Whatever were his defects, they were so far counter-balanced by his virtues and his excellencies that the former will be speedily forgotten in the remembrance of the latter which will continue to brighten when individual asperities shall have died away.

Mr. Woodfin was about 67 years of age.

From the Charlotte Observer.

North Carolina Knight-Errantry.

It does seem to us that the temperance advocates in this State are suffering from a questionable propriety in identifying the noble cause in which they are engaged with that of a female; a lady for all we know, but known to them only through the agency of the press, and one who had left what is recognized in this section of country as woman's true sphere, when she became a public lecturer. Miss Armstrong, indeed, is a lady, but she is not the source of the evil, while the sisters rectify the almost universal mistake which originates it. It is admitted by physicians that dyspepsia and non-assimilation of the food produce a general debility, and that the system is unable to resist as well as to resist the attacks of disease. A vinegary or two of this whole-some invigorant at bed time rarely fails to induce tranquil repose.
